Final reflections on the ETHNA System legacy

by Elsa González-Esteban, Associate Professor at the Universitat Jaume I (Spain) and ETHNA System Project Coordinator

We knew from the start that the promotion of institutional changes capable of fostering ethical and responsible values and behaviour in research and innovation organisations would be no simple task. While practising science with and for society is fundamental in a rapidly changing world, it requires a strong ethical infrastructure. The ETHNA System project faced head on the challenge of designing an ethical governance system and piloting in diverse contexts of research and innovation resulting in an abundance of valuable practical tools and resources for organisations. The experience gained from the implementation of the ETHNA System in different countries and contexts across Europe is invaluable and will continue to help promoting science with and for society long after the official end of the project in June 2023.
